

authenticity

1. the quality of being genuine; real
2. an origin supported by unquestionable evidence; verified
3. one's true nature or beliefs

Authenticity is rarely found in grand gestures. Not in lightning strikes or fireworks in the sky. It is a deep-rooted, quiet yearning, an invitation to be the only you there was ever meant to be.

It's the clearing away of all that is not you, peeling back the layers and you discover what was there in the beginning. It's allowing yourself to be truly known and loved, as well as truly knowing and loving someone else.

It's the willingness to stand alone in doing what you believe is right, even when what's right isn't a popular choice.

Authenticity can't be copied. It can't be fake. It withstands shifting sand. It resists comparison. It defies seeing yourself as who you are less than or who you're not. It's acknowledging the difference between what is fake and what is real. Because when we are real, shabbiness won't matter. Lack will disappear. Falling short will lose its foothold.

So your time is now. To welcome in the light that is all your own. To dive deep into the glorious reality of who you are meant to be.

Let's not hurry, let's not hesitate—in finding the one life we were born to claim.
